were accompanied by a little trade selling in the cotton market here today, while there was also scattered realizing after the advance of the earlier week, and prices eased off in the absence of support. The close was steady but at the lowest point of the day, 7 to 12 points under the final figures of Friday.

The market opened steady at a decline of 2 to 4 points in response to easier cables. General business was lacking and small offerings were sufficient to send prices off to 7.39 for December and 7.52 for March contracts, or about 13 to 17 points under the high level of yesterday. Gradual reopening of the various exchanges throughout the country would suggest that conditions are becoming more normal, while the general movement of merchandise is improving, and collections are reported easier.

of merchandise is improving, and collections are reported easier.

Cables from Mainchester claim that cotton manufacturers in that section also are becoming more hypeful as a result of more foquent inquiries from India, a moderate demand from China and improving home trade. These features appeared to stimulate no important demand today, however, and the talk around the ring reflected a disposition to wait for further test of the southern spot situation.
